

Super contribution splitting with your spouse

THIS FACT SHEET EXPLAINS THE RULES AND BENEFITS OF SPLITTING SUPER CONTRIBUTIONS WITH YOUR SPOUSE

Splitting your super contributions with your spouse may help you both achieve financial security in retirement.

Contribution splitting allows you to split your concessional (before-tax) contributions from your accumulation super account with your spouse.

Concessional contributions include employer and salary sacrifice contributions.

Contributions can be split if your spouse is:

- under preservation age, regardless of working status, or
- between preservation age and 65 years of age and has not permanently retired from the workforce, or
- between ages 60 and 65 and has not terminated gainful employment after reaching age 60.

Contributions can't be split if your spouse is aged 65 or over.

Preservation age

Your preservation age depends on when you were born.

YOUR DATE OF BIRTH	PRESERVATION AGE
Before 1 July 1960	55
1 July 1960 – 30 June 1961	56
1 July 1961 – 30 June 1962	57
1 July 1962 – 30 June 1963	58
1 July 1963 – 30 June 1964	59
1 July 1964 or after	60

A spouse for a UniSuper member means:

- a person to whom you are legally married,
- a person, whether of the same sex or a different sex, with whom you are in a relationship that is registered under a prescribed Australian State or Territory law, and
- a person, whether of the same sex or a different sex, with whom you are not legally married but who lives with you on a genuine domestic basis as a couple.

Who owns the contributions?

Once the contributions have been transferred to your spouse's account, they belong to your spouse.

Split contributions are subject to the preservation rules and can't be accessed until your spouse reaches preservation age and permanently retires from the workforce, or satisfies another condition of release.

Does splitting apply to Defined Benefit Division (DBD) members?

Contributions made to the defined benefit component can't be split because defined benefits are calculated according to a formula. However, most DBD members also have an accumulation component and any concessional (before-tax) contributions made to this component can be split.

Which contributions can be split?

Only concessional (before-tax) contributions can be split. The maximum amount of contributions that can be split is the lesser of:

- 85% of your concessional contributions for the financial year, and
- the concessional contributions cap for that financial year.

Concessional contributions caps

THE CONCESSIONAL CONTRIBUTIONS CAPS ARE:
Year ending	Concessional cap
30 June 2023	$27,500
30 June 2024	$27,500

When can contributions be split?

Generally, you can only request a contribution split from contributions made in the previous financial year.

However, if your entire benefit is to be transferred to another super fund or paid out to you, you can make a contribution split request in the current financial year provided that the contributions have been made. Contributions must be split before your transfer or withdrawal is processed.

The concessional contributions cap may be increased above a general concessional cap, if you are eligible.

This will occur if:

- your concessional contributions for the year exceed the general concessional contributions cap
- your total super balance just before the start of the financial year is less than $500,000, and
- you have unused concessional contributions cap amounts from the previous five years (with 2018-19 financial year being the first year you can accrue unused concessional contributions).

Your concessional contributions cap will equal the general concessional cap plus the previously unused concessional contributions cap amount, up to the amount of the excess.

Visit www.ato.gov.au for more information.

Which contributions can't be split?

The following contributions can't be split with your spouse:

- non-concessional (after-tax) contributions,
- amounts rolled over from other super funds,
- directed termination payments,
- government super co-contributions, and
- any defined benefit contributions.

Can the split contributions stay with UniSuper?

Yes. If your spouse has a UniSuper account, the split contributions can be transferred to that account.

If your spouse isn't a UniSuper member they may be able to open a Personal Account. Read the Personal Account Product Disclosure Statement available at unisuper.com.au/pds or by calling us on 1800 331 685.

How do I split my contributions?

To split contributions made between 1 July 2022 and 30 June 2023, you must submit the attached Contribution splitting form to us by 30 June 2024.

We may be unable to process your application to split contributions if it would result in your accumulation balance falling below $6,000.

If you intend to claim a tax deduction and split some or all of your personal contributions with your spouse, you must lodge the notice of your intention to claim a tax deduction with us before requesting that the contributions be split.

If you don't make an application to split your contributions made between 1 July 2022 and 30 June 2023 by 30 June 2024, you won't be able to split them in the future.

What are the advantages of contribution splitting?

There are a number of possible advantages in electing to split concessional contributions with your spouse. Some of these include:

- If you split your concessional contributions with a spouse who is older than you, your spouse may be able to satisfy a condition of release and have access to their benefits earlier.
- If your spouse is younger than you, splitting your concessional contributions with them may enable you to qualify for a higher Age Pension under the means test.
- If you or your spouse are close to the transfer balance cap limit, splitting concessional contributions will generally help to maximise the combined amounts of super that may be transferred into retirement phase. Your personal transfer balance cap will be between $1.6 million and $1.9 million, depending on your personal circumstances. To view your transfer balance cap and your transfer balance account, contact the ATO or log into the ATO's online services.
- Current superannuation rules may change over time. Spreading a couple's superannuation benefits across both members may assist with managing future legislative changes.

For the 2023-24 financial year, if you've reached your preservation age but are still under age 60, you'll be able to withdraw the first $235,000 of the taxable component of your super benefit tax free. Any amount you withdraw above this threshold will be taxed at a maximum of 17% (including the Medicare Levy).

If you're under your preservation age, the whole amount will be taxed at 22% (including the Medicare Levy). If you're aged 60 or over, no tax will apply.

Contribution splitting doesn't reduce the amount counted towards your concessional (before-tax) contributions cap.

If you have an accumulation account or you're a Defined Benefit Division (DBD) member with an accumulation component, you're able to split your concessional (before-tax) contributions with your spouse provided that your spouse is:

- under preservation age
- between preservation age and 65 years of age and has not permanently retired from the workforce, or
- between ages 60 and 65 and has not terminated employment after reaching age 60.

You can split contributions made in the previous financial year or if you're closing your account, you can split contributions made in the current financial year. Contributions can only be split once in any financial year. We may be unable to process your application to split your contributions if it would result in your accumulation balance falling below $6,000.

MAXIMUM YOU CAN CONTRIBUTION SPLIT

The maximum amount of concessional (before-tax) contributions you can split is the lesser of:

- 85% of concessional (before-tax) contributions for the financial year, and
- the concessional contribution cap for the financial year (currently $27,500).

INTEND TO CLAIM A TAX DEDUCTION?

You must lodge the notice of your intention to claim a tax deduction with UniSuper before requesting that the contributions be split.
