

Opting in to the Defined Benefit Division

This fact sheet is for members who are considering joining the Defined Benefit Division (DBD).

What this fact sheet covers

This fact sheet is for people who are considering joining the Defined Benefit Division (DBD) on or after 1 November 2021. It's an overview of the eligibility requirements, as well as some features of the product.

We recommend you read the Product Disclosure Statement (PDS) to learn about all aspects of the DBD before making a decision. Visit unisuper.com.au/pds for more information.

WHAT'S BEST FOR YOU?

When deciding what's best for you, there are many factors to consider. We've outlined a few of those factors, but we haven't considered your personal objectives, financial situation or needs. You may want to consider seeking professional financial advice before making your decision, as well as accessing a range of helpful resources at unisuper.com.au/choosingyoursuper.

The DBD is only open to eligible employees which is generally those who work in the higher education and research sector and receive 14% or 17% employer contributions. Defined benefit super is designed to provide reliable growth over your working life and give you a better idea of how much money you'll have in retirement. It's based on a formula so isn't directly affected by the performance of investment markets.

It's generally well suited to you if you're:

- intending to pursue a reasonably long career in the sector, and
- expecting some salary growth arising from promotion or reclassification to higher roles during your career.

We recognise that the DBD may not suit everyone — including people anticipating only a short period of employment in the higher education and research sector, and those expecting little or no salary growth arising from promotion or reclassification to higher paying roles.

If you're eligible, and interested in making the switch, you have two years from the date your DBD eligible role started to decide. We've outlined the eligibility criteria for joining below. Please read the Defined Benefit Division and Accumulation 2 Product Disclosure Statement (PDS) for more information.

Eligibility information

In order to join the DBD, you must:

- be employed in a role your employer has approved for DBD membership, and in that role for no more than 24 months.
- be under the age of 65 on the date you commence in the DBD
- have not previously had an Accumulation 2 account
- provide your Tax File Number
- have not previously commenced a DBD membership on or after 1 November 2021.

If you meet the eligibility criteria, you'll need to complete the attached Opt in to the DBD form and return it to your Superannuation Officer for processing.

Default member contributions

As a DBD member, your super is made up of contributions from your employer—either 17% or 14% of your salary—as well as money from your take-home pay.

The money coming out of your pay is called a default member contribution and could come from your before-tax or after-tax salary.

Default member contributions commence at 7% (after-tax) of your salary. However, you can change or cancel them when you complete your Opt in to the DBD form. Your employer will start to deduct them when you join.

If you reduce your default member contributions, you won't be able to increase them later. Reducing your level of default member contributions can impact your DBD formula. The level of default member contributions that you can elect depends on whether you receive 14% or 17% employer contributions. The rates are shown in the tables on page 2.

Read the PDS for more information about the impact.

ONCE YOU'VE OPTED IN TO THE DBD:

- Your membership will commence from the first day of your next pay period.
- You'll pay default member contributions of 7% of your salary (after tax). You can change this in your Opt in to the DBD form. If you've previously reduced your member contributions from an earlier DBD membership, your member contributions will continue at the previous rate.
- Any contributions to your accumulation component will be invested in the Balanced investment option if you haven't chosen an investment strategy.
- If eligible, you'll receive one unit of Death and Total and Permanent Disablement (TPD) cover without providing evidence of your health to our Insurer.
- External Income Protection cover isn't offered in the DBD, so if you're currently a UniSuper member and have this cover through your account, it will be cancelled.

If you have questions about changing default arrangements, or your insurance or investment options, please speak with a superannuation consultant who can talk you through the features of the DBD. Go to unisuper.com.au/on-campus to make a booking.

Frequently asked questions

Q: How do I know if I'm eligible to join the DBD?

You need to meet the eligibility criteria from both your employer and UniSuper.

Generally, for your employer to consider you eligible:

- you're receiving 14% or 17% superannuation, and
- you're in a fixed-term contract or ongoing role.

For UniSuper it means:

- you're under the age of 65,
- you've not been an Accumulation 2 member previously,
- you provide your Tax File Number, and
- you have not previously commenced a DBD account on or after 1 November 2021.

It's important that you check all eligibility criteria before completing your Opt in to the DBD form.

Q: What is an eligible role?

To be in an eligible role to join the DBD, you must be employed by an employer that has been approved by UniSuper's trustee to participate in the DBD. Generally, to be approved, an employer operates in the higher education or research sector, or is associated with an entity that does.

If you're unsure whether your role is eligible, please check with your employer.

Q: How long do I have to decide?

You have two years to decide if you'd like to join the DBD from when you start in an eligible role with your employer. If you haven't transferred to the DBD within two years, you'll only get another opportunity to join the DBD if you change jobs and start in another eligible role. At that point, you'll have another two years from the commencement of that eligible role.

Q: How do I find out how much my employer contributes to my super?

The payslips your employer provides will probably include a breakdown of employer and member contributions made to your UniSuper account. If not, check with your payroll officer.

Q: How do I opt into the DBD?

Once you've read the PDS and are ready to join the DBD, you'll need to complete the attached Opt in to the DBD form and submit it to the person responsible for super at your workplace. They'll set up the right payroll deductions and let UniSuper know you're changing to the DBD.

Q: When does my DBD account commence?

Your DBD account will commence from the beginning of the next pay period after your employer has processed your completed form. This can take up to three weeks depending your payroll cycle. Your DBD membership will not be backdated.

Q: If I join the DBD, what happens to my accumulation super?

Your existing super account will remain invested in the options you've previously selected, or the default investment option, Balanced, if you've not made a choice.

Your DBD account will commence and operate alongside your accumulation account.

For more information about how your employer and default member contributions are invested, please read the PDS.

Q: What if I am a DBD member who joined before 1 November 2021?

If you joined the DBD prior to 1 November 2021, your membership will continue until you leave your job. We'll write to you when you leave your job to outline your options and what will happen if you are to return to an eligible role in the future.

Q: What happens if I deferred DBD my membership (before 1 November 2021) and start an eligible role after 1 November 2021?

If you commence an eligible role after 1 November 2021, you'll automatically recommence contributing to your DBD membership and your member contributions will continue at the previous rate.

Q: What if I've previously been a DBD member?

If you joined the DBD on or after 1 November 2021, left and your account was moved into Accumulation 1, this means you're unable to opt in again in the future. Therefore, if you join the DBD after 1 November 2021, you need to maintain continuous membership to stay in the DBD.

Q: If I switch to the DBD, what are the impacts to my external insurance cover?

When you move to the DBD, any external insurance cover* you already have as a UniSuper member for Death or Total and Permanent Disability continues. It's important to ensure you've got enough money in your in your accumulation component to cover the cost of your insurance premiums, or your cover will be cancelled.

External Income Protection cover isn't offered in the DBD, so if you're already a UniSuper member and have this cover, it will be cancelled when your DBD account commences.

Q: Do I get any insurance cover with the DBD?

If eligible, you'll receive one unit of Death and TPD external insurance cover when you join the DBD. If you receive this cover you can elect up to an additional two units without having to provide any evidence of your health to our Insurer.

DBD members also generally receive inbuilt benefits, which can be thought of as like insurance, and can be paid if you're temporarily or permanently unable to work due to injury or illness, suffer from a terminal medical condition, or die. Inbuilt benefits have a three year pre-existing condition exclusion and are provided by UniSuper, not our Insurer. As they are 'built-in' to the DBD, there is no additional charge deducted from your account for them.

Q: Can I change my default member contributions?

Yes. You can reduce your default member contributions to levels outlined in the tables on page 2. Your employer will continue to make contributions to your account.

The highest level of default member contributions are designed to maintain your DBD formula at the maximum level and provide you with a better outcome for retirement. We recommend you seek financial advice, or make an appointment with one of our super consultants to help you understand your options.

Q: If I reduce my default member contributions, can I increase them later?

As a DBD member, you won't be able to increase your level of default member contributions once you've reduced them. However, you can make extra super contributions to your accumulation component with salary sacrifice payments or voluntary member contributions.
